The Sustainable Forestry Teachers' Academy is a four-day residential program that focuses on the social, economic, and environmental aspects of sustainable forestry in North Carolina.

Teachers will visit a variety of forests and mills learning about forest management and the manufacturing of various wood products such as paper, furniture, plywood, and lumber. Teachers participate in tours and hikes in forest under an array of ownership and management plans. Excursions to museums, state forests, experimental forests, and environmental learning centers round out the experience.

Participants should expect a fast-paced week, with extended moderate walking, great food, networking, and lots of fun! In addition, extensive materials and discussions prepare participants to transfer what they have learned back to the classroom. Meals and lodging are provided, however teachers selected to participate are required to submit a $100 deposit to hold their spot in the academy, which will be returned upon arrival. CEU renewal credits will be awarded.
